situation oversee him or her.

By the light of the priests and priestesses, the knowledge-holders of the great principles, we can be led out of the bondages of perception. By the light of the knowledge-holders we begin to understand how not to mistake a thing for its essence. We begin to learn as well that the cosmos is all one existence, made one by the permeation of energy, and that material is really energy given shape. This is the voyage of knowledge, however, that each one must take.

May you find the voyage both invigorating and productive. The charters, the priests and priestesses, the knowledge-holders, are waiting.

I